

Is your organization protected from fraud?

Forensic accounting has long been the exclusive domain of high-level accountants and auditors skilled at breaking down complex financial transactions. While their knowledge is invaluable as expert witnesses or consultants brought in to uncover complicated schemes, this alone is not sufficient to detect, prevent, and successfully prosecute financial fraud. Executives, managers, criminal investigators, and prosecuting attorneys all require a basic understanding of accounting principles and investigative techniques to protect organizations from fraud. This knowledge is invaluable for better insight into where an organization is most susceptible to fraud as well as to a more productive investigation process when fraud is suspected. This book:

- Is the first book to provide a thorough, up-to-date grounding in forensic accounting and fraud investigation techniques to non-experts.
- Breaks down basic accounting principles as they apply to forensic accounting.
- Discusses the most common types of fraud with real-life examples for business managers and criminal investigators.
- Details the investigative process, providing guidance on documentary evidence, role of the expert witness, and interview techniques.

Available wherever books are sold.

ISBN: 0-471-46324-8, Hardcover, 304 pages, December 2003, $50.00

Volume discounts are available when you order 10 or more copies.

Please email stesta@wiley.com for more information.

HOWARD SILVERSTONE, CPA, FCA, CFE is a Director of Forensic Resolutions, Inc. He has concentrated on forensic accounting since 1985 and has been involved in every aspect of cases, including planning, detailed analysis, discovery, and expert testimony.

MICHAEL SHEETZ, JD (Palm Beach, FL) is a former criminal investigator with nearly twenty years experience in white collar and computer crime, investigating such crimes as racketeering, money laundering, fraud and embezzlement. He is currently an adjunct professor of business law, ethics and international law, and a former appellate law clerk for the Fourth District Court of Appeals.